

Remarks of Paul Chesser
Director, Corporate Integrity Project for National Legal and Policy Center
Wells Fargo 2022 Shareholder Meeting – April 26, 2022 – 4 minutes

I am Paul Chesser, director of the Corporate Integrity Project for National Legal and Policy Center.

My extended remarks in support of our proposal can be found on our website, NLPC.org.

Wells Fargo opposes our resolution because the board claims in the proxy that it already provides “robust disclosures” and “extensive information” about its charitable contributions.

I beg to differ.

What Wells Fargo does do is throw a bunch of information on its website, make sure it is difficult to find, and also make any useful information that there is to find, is sliced, diced, and separated so it’s difficult for users to connect information to each other.

And the information that is there needs to be cleaned up. A Girl Scout council up the street from where I live, which was listed as a grant recipient, was categorized as an environmental group.

Is that for picking up trash on the side of the road?

As for the things Wells Fargo spends its hundreds of millions of dollars in charity on under the term “Corporate Responsibility,” there are a lot of dubious causes that shareholders could question.

One of those causes is climate change, which is just Marxism dressed up as environmentalism, shifting money from viable sources of energy to nonviable ones.

And now it is causing real economic pain and harm across the planet in the form of energy prices and resultant inflation, due to the de-emphasis on fossil fuels and the subsidization of undependable, environmentally-damaging sources like wind and solar.

Climate change alarmists are anti-science, anti-logic, anti-economics, and anti-humanity.

If you go back in the history of climate doomsayers, they are just another in a decades-long line of catastrophe-predicting grifters whose prophecies have failed over and over again.

I can point to over 100 predictions these government-funded scientists have issued that failed to materialize.

You would think that a capitalist institution like Wells Fargo would support groups promoting capitalism and free enterprise. Instead, it bankrolls a host of anti-business activists who wage war on fossil fuels.

Even before Russia invaded Ukraine, the world was on the verge of an energy crisis caused by First World activists like the Sierra Club, the result of which can only be food shortages and social unrest in poor countries. Now that the folly of the West's dependence on Russia for energy is plain for all to see, will Wells Fargo continue to prattle on about sustainability and ESG, or will it allow the free market to operate and allow our country to re-achieve energy security?

Another deeply disturbing recipient of Wells Fargo's charitable support are the advocates for the radical transgender agenda promoted by extremist groups, like the Human Rights Campaign.

These radicals opposed Florida's recently-passed law to protect children in grades three and below from being exposed to discussions about sexual topics and gender identity.

It's a perfectly common-sense law supported by at least 70% of Floridians and a majority of Republicans, Democrats and Independents in the state.

Unfortunately Wells Fargo supports extremist groups who want to repeal the Florida law.

Also, just two months ago the Miami Foundation announced it would receive $20 million from Wells Fargo.

Among this recipient's major projects are several initiatives under what it calls its "LGBTQ Community Fund," which finances a plethora of leftist woke agenda items in Florida.

Instead of funding this sort of extremism, Wells Fargo needs to take a hard look at the fix that Disney finds itself in, stay out of politics, and properly serve ALL its customers and shareholders.

It's radical "charity" recipients like these that Wells Fargo makes almost impossible to find on its website, and why we demand it improve its transparency in disclosing its charitable activities.
